'Reform Radar'
August 2023 – Present

- Founder of 'Reform Radar', an open-access digital platform under development, mapping and analysing prison-based rehabilitation initiatives worldwide.
- Designed as a comparative research tool, the platform centralises fragmented data across jurisdictions, enabling cross-country analysis of legal, institutional and policy approaches.
- Curate and analyse data on rehabilitation initiatives, including labour, education, and reintegration programmes, to support research, policy development and evidence-based advocacy.
- Developing a participatory model for data collection and collaboration with researchers, NGOs and policymakers, with the aim of building a scalable, contributor-driven research infrastructure.

'Law, Technology, and Cybercrime: Legal Responses to Emerging Threats' (proposed module)
March 2025 – Present

- Designing a proposed undergraduate/postgraduate module examining legal responses to emerging technological challenges, including cybercrime, surveillance, AI and data privacy.
- Developing indicative teaching materials and seminar structures to support student engagement with complex and evolving areas of law.

TEACHING APPROACH

- My teaching is centred on creating structured and inclusive learning environments that support students in developing a clear understanding of legal principles and their application. I use problem-based and discussion-led learning to encourage active engagement and critical analysis, alongside targeted support for legal writing and analytical skills. I place particular emphasis on supporting students from diverse academic backgrounds and fostering independent learning. My teaching practice is informed by ongoing reflection and professional development, including my Associate Fellowship (AFHEA).
